HISTORY OF COMMUNICATION

Since the beginning of time, people need to communicate with each other. The most common type of communication is speaking. Firstly, people developed the written language. Then, Gutenberg invented a writing machine called "the printing press" in 1440.

In 1840s, Samuel Morse invented the telegraph. It helped people transmit letters by using signals. Then, in 1876, Alexander Graham Bell invented the microphone and telephone. The telephone became popular all around the world very quickly.

Communication went on improving during 20th century. John Logie Baird invented the television in 1925 and it became more popular year by year. Then, mobile phones came. Martin Cooper, an engineer invented the world's first mobile phone on April 3, 1973. The first mobile phone was not like a mobile phone because it was 1.1kg and 228.6x127x44.4mm. It had 30 minutes of talk-time. It only had 30 phone numbers. It was also $3995. Finally, we have smartphones and the Internet in our lives. They have made communication easier.
