The Internet has been the main source in different fields such as education, science, research and others to develop, design and do many other things. The term "Internet" was first used for networking by J.C.R. Licklider in 1962. He used it to connect several computers for accessing data and programs. Then, the ARPANET was used as the first electronic mail messaging service. Finally, ARPANET became the Internet which worked on different networks. It provided data communication from one place to another easily. In 1995, the Internet became a global information system. It started to provide the users access to all the services. Since then, the networking concept has changed. Now, there are various connection types like wired, wireless, 2G, 3G, 4G and 4,5G that lead to increase the network capacity in the world.
